

INFORMATIVE— CONSTRUCTED RESPONSE

This short constructed response was prompted by the following test question: "Explain how civil disobedience was used in the struggle for India's independence." The student had only a portion of a class period to write the response.

Civil Disobedience

Civil disobedience is the refusal to follow an unjust law. Gandhi led India to independence by using civil disobedience and non-violent resistance. His motto was, "will not fight, will not comply." One of Gandhi's first acts of civil disobedience was when he refused to move to 3rd class on the train. He bought a 1st class ticket but they wouldn't let him sit there. He then got kicked off the train. This is just one example of Gandhi's enforcement of non-violent resistance. He has done many things from refusing to get off the sidewalk to being beaten for burning his pass. He figured that if he died, it would be for the right reasons. He said, "They can have my body, not my obedience." Eventually he got all of India going against Britain's unjust laws. While it took the people of India longer to realize, Gandhi proved that civil disobedience and non-violent resistance can be a more effective way of fighting back. Britain finally let India have its independence.
