
Guess the Headline

1

Shortly after talk show host Ellen DeGeneres wrote on Twitter that she would like to have a lock of Justin Bieber's hair, the teen star donated one into a fundraiser in her show.

The fundraiser was for The Gentle Barn, a nonprofit organization for farm animals. DeGeneres offered the lock on eBay and sold it for $40,668. The money will directly go to the organization.

The bidder will get the lock of hair in a box signed by Bieber and will also be invited to "The Ellen DeGeneres Show" when Bieber is a guest.

2

Despite bad headlines and his controversial lifestyle, actor Charlie Sheen reigns the world wide web. He now holds the Guinness World Record for the fastest Twitter user to reach 1 million followers. He joined Twitter on March 1 and within 25 hours and 17 minutes his followers reached the one million mark.

In recent interviews, Sheen picked at Chuck Lorre, the producer of his hit series "Two and a Half Men," which went on a production hiatus.

3

Subway has overtaken McDonald's as the largest fast-food chain, at least in terms of units. 33,749 Subway restaurants can be found worldwide, whereas McDonald's has 32,737 restaurants. Thereupon, McDonald's said it rather wants to "be better" and not just "get bigger".

Actual Headline #1: Lock of Justin Bieber's Hair Sells for $40,668
Actual Headline #2: Charlie Sheen Breaks Guinness World Record for Twitter
Actual Headline #3: Subway Is World's Largest Restaurant Chain